LIKE A RABBIT.

Ask any teacher, or High School scholar to write with a pen or pencil. Notice the fingers pinched hard together with the knuckles pointing upwards and a tight grip on the holder. See the fingers moving "like a rabbit's paws." YOU CANNOT find in grades or High School, scholars with Muscular Movement of the arm. Not one has been trained correctly. It is painful to see them writing finger movement, but see the pupils at the Santa Fe Business College; the arm is seen working—not the fingers. The only correct method of writing nearly without fatigue and that tired three o'clock feeling, is to use the Muscular movement. Parents, you are wasting your children's time—his "or" schooling—his "or" clothing—and the loss of wages when he "or" leaves school, for he "or" has received his diploma from the High School. What does he "or" know in order to earn a living—except day labor and unskilled work. You have to send him "or" to a Business College afterwards. If you want him "or" to know how to make money to be of any service in any position. He "or" doesn't know the least thing about making out an account or to strike a balance or to take a quick note, or to spell, or to write properly. They are simply overgrown babies, with or without ambition and do not know the first way to turn to become respectable citizens. They can chew gum and that's all.

Our experience, (gained in 10,000 towns lecturing to 15,000 schools the world over) is that only the boys and girls who can spell, write, do shorthand and Typewriting, are the boys and girls that make headway in this world. Do not make the mistake of putting the cart before the horse. You let your children be taught all about Caesar, and the past wars, dead men, Latin, Greek, geometry, euclid, etc., and none of these subjects teach them to earn a living, whereas they could absorb the very same knowledge after their school days by reading good history and other subjects, and by conversation with wise people. That's the way Lincoln did, and do you think your children can do better?

The Santa Fe Business College is capable of setting a few more pupils. If we keep increasing at the same rate, by next Spring we shall be compelled to build a business University in Santa Fe. The children demand it and parents will be acting a wise part in accepting the suggestion here given. Bring your children for us to criticize. The advice given will be of the soundest. DO NOT BE NERVOUS TO SAY WHAT YOU CAN AFFORD WEEKLY.

We hope that the school committee and the teachers will not take offense at these remarks for we are not personal in any way. The bad system prevails in thousands of towns.

U. S. GUNBOAT IS BADLY DAMAGED

VICKSBURG PUTS IN AT MAGDALENA BAY WITH HOLE STOVE IN HULL FROM A BROKEN PROPELLER

Washington, D. C., Aug. 26.—The gunboat Vicksburg, scouting off the west coast of Mexico, to watch the revolutionists has put into Magdalena Bay with a hole punched in her hull by a broken propeller. The cruiser Cleveland, ordered to Nicaragua will bring the Vicksburg in to Mare Island navy yard. The Cleveland ought to reach Magdalena Bay about September 1. She is now in Puget Sound. The Vicksburg is in no immediate danger.

The cruiser Des Moines will sail from Boston on September 6 to Mexico ports on the east coast to watch the situation. The vessel will stop at Vera Cruz, Tampico and other ports. It will be commanded by Commander Charles S. Hughes, transferred from the scout boat cruiser Birmingham.

AUDITOR UNEARTHS GRAVE
FAUDS IN SOCORRO COUNTY SAYS REPORT TO GOVERNOR.

The chairman of the board of county commissions. A statement that was possibly intended as an explanation for the failure of the books of the treasurer to show the receipt of any funds from the government on this transaction does not merit any consideration and is not reported by the records. It was said that funds were received from the government but that they were expended in furnishing and outfitting the court chambers, etc. Your auditor made an investigation in an endeavor to support this statement. An inventory was taken of the books, furniture and equipment that was purchased and every substantial item was verified by the invoices on file, and it is submitted that no additions to the equipment of the court chambers, or other offices of the court house of any substantial amount could be found that were paid other than on county warrants through the treasurer's office, which would not be the case if the explanation that "the funds that were received from the government were disbursed for equipment for court chambers by the probate clerk direct," could be supported. The original vouchers from the treasury department are in your possession and show where the ultimate liability for this irregularity rests.

100,000 PRAYED OUTSIDE THE PALACE AS MUTSUHITO, EMPEROR OF JAPAN, DIED

Tokyo, Japan, Aug. 24.—A most striking manifestation of the esteem felt for the emperor by all classes of persons was shown the day before he died.

A great assembly, numbering over one hundred thousand, gathered in the great spaces outside the palace.

At the various entrances to the grounds had been placed receptacles which were filled from time to time by an attendant with water drawn from the moat for the convenience of persons wishing to express by the pouring of water over the hands their desire for purification before entering the grounds. The latest newspaper extras, tied to electric poles, were constantly surrounded by ever changing crowds of eager readers. Patrolmen mounted or on foot were busy keeping the crowds moving, waving paper lanterns to indicate the right of way.

After entering the grounds hats were removed and it seemed though waves of emotion were sweeping over the multitude, bowing them to earth for a few moments of silent fervent supplication only to rise again to give place to the pushing thousands from behind. Many hands carrying lanterns wound their way through the mass towards the front of the crowd. There were women and men with lobes and little children pick-a-back, girls and boys, old and young, rich and poor, bands of school children led by their teachers, family groups, squads of soldiers and sailors, all seeming in their best dress.

The silence of the multitude, only accentuated by the mighty sounds of wooden clogs crunching through the gravel; the beautiful moonlight night, the dark shadows of the pines, the century old walls of the moat; the mystery of the mid-summer night's breeze, all combined to make a memorable, a never-to-be-forgotten scene. One thought again of the aged emperor lying so ill in his palace so close at hand and yet so distant and inaccessible; of the grave crisis that his illness caused; of what his death would mean.

While the majority of them knelt flat on the ground, many of them were walking hither and thither, making deep obeisances towards the palace and uttering prayers. The eyes of most were swollen and red and great beads of perspiration were observed upon their foreheads and cheeks. Several persons, evidently superintendents of various parties of worshippers, were busy fanning the crouching persons; and scores of policemen were busied in regulating the movements of the people, and warding off curious spectators.

In view of this extraordinary demonstration the household department had hoisted a lantern within the palace grounds to show the direction in which the imperial sick chamber was situated. The light, though distinctly visible against the gloomy starless sky, burned but dimly, and looked somewhat melancholy. With this light as the symbol of the emperor's person the crowd offered up prayers. Many of them, it is said, had been fasting for days or undergoing some other self-sacrificing act of purification.

As the night advanced the ground became more and more crowded. People of all classes came up in twos and threes or singly, while large parties of fifty or a hundred or even more would stream up in orderly lines, many of them provided with lanterns. The stony ground in front of the palace was literally covered with these people. Most of them formed independent groups, knelt flat upon the ground, their foreheads nearly touching the gravel, and murmured out prayers.

Here and there tallow candles were burning and small temporary shrines had been set up, with some offering thereon. In front crouched thousands of people, some in groups of five or ten, others scores, all repeating prayers in zealous tones.

Most of them were priests and religious devotees of certain sects, but there was a large percentage of ordinary folk. What was especially noteworthy was the presence of large numbers of women, old and young. Young girls wearing magenta hakama, evidently students or nurses, were seen kneeling on the ground absorbed in silent prayer.

The nanumidabutsu of Buddhist followers, the nanumyohoren-gekko of the Nichiren Buddhists, and the tenri-ono-mikoto of the Tenri kyogai believers were among the loudest and unmistakable of the groups. One group of the soberly dressed people along the lower railings, who stood in a ring with their heads down in solemn silence were evidently Christians. In short all sects and descriptions of religion known in Japan were represented; while people of almost every occupation and trade were observed from priest, soldier, official, student down to fisherman and laborer.

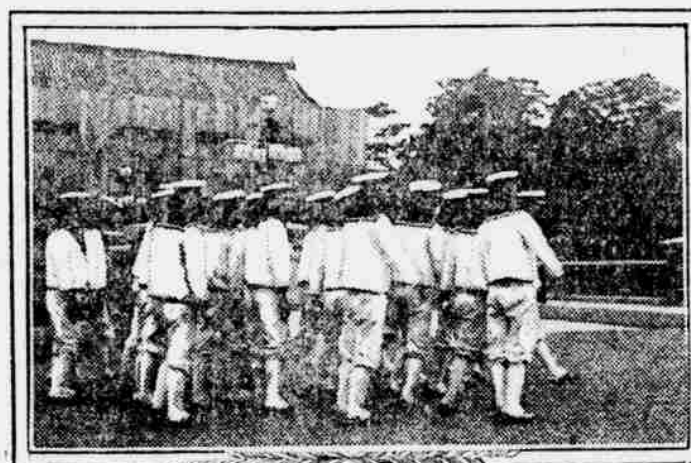

Such was the scene that continued burning and small temporary shrines all through the night until the morn had been set up, with some offering

TOKYO CRAPE DRAPED AND SILENT WHEN MIKADO DIED

When the Mikado of Japan died, on July 30, all Tokyo, as well as the entire nation, went into mourning. The streets were deserted, the big stores closed and draped with crape, while thousands of laborers and artisans abandoned their daily work and dedicated the day to prayer for the emperor.
